

Stories of Long Beach

A micamo Original Series

Documenting the people, places, and voices that shape our city.

Why This Series Exists

Every neighborhood has its landmarks. Every storefront has a history. Every community is built by people whose stories often go untold.

Stories of Long Beach is an original documentary series created by micamo to celebrate the people, businesses, artists, and communities that give our city its identity.

Through thoughtful filmmaking and intimate conversations, the series explores the moments that connect us—preserving today's stories for tomorrow.

Season One

Season One will introduce audiences to the people behind the places that make Long Beach feel like home.

Each episode will explore a different story through a cinematic, documentary approach rooted in curiosity, authenticity, and community.

Potential stories include:

- Independent businesses
- Artists and makers
- Family traditions
- Neighborhood gathering places
- Community leaders
- Cultural preservation

Our Approach

We believe the strongest stories aren't manufactured—they're discovered.

Rather than focusing on headlines, Stories of Long Beach looks toward the everyday moments that quietly shape our city: the shop that's served generations of neighbors, the artist devoted to their craft, the family preserving traditions, or the gathering place where strangers become friends.

Our goal is simple:

Create a lasting visual archive of Long Beach through the people who call it home.

Help Bring These Stories to Life

Every story begins with someone who believes it's worth telling.

Stories of Long Beach is made possible through collaboration with the businesses, organizations, and community members who care deeply about the future of Long Beach.

We're currently seeking founding partners who share our belief that preserving local stories strengthens the communities we live in.
